Research Areas:

I am an educator and researcher fascinated by who we are when we're online. My work focuses on the intersection of networked and institutional practices: digital scholarship, networked identities and influence, and Massive Open Online Courses (MOOCs). I also manage the direction and growth of adult education and professional learning programs within the UPEI Faculty of Education.

In my research, I aim to practice and model the open, participatory, and collaborative ethos that is at the core of what I study. I was a pioneering collaborator in MOOC research, and currently lead international digital pedagogy / strategy sessions and digital literacies workshops. I have 20 years of teaching experience, including more than a decade in higher education, and have successfully designed and taught B.Ed, M.Ed, and college-level courses. I've published in peer-reviewed and public venues, and given keynote and plenary addresses in North America, Europe, the Middle East, and Australia.

Education:

Doctor of Philosophy, Educational Studies – University of Prince Edward Island (UPEI) – 2015
Thesis: Scholarship in abundance: Influence, engagement, and attention in scholarly networks.
Master of Arts in Education, Educational Foundations – Mount Saint Vincent University – 2000
Certificate in Special Education - Mount Allison University – 1994
Bachelor of Education, English Methods - Mount Allison University – 1994
Bachelor of Arts, Honours, English Literature/Political Science - Mount Allison University – 1993

Current Position:
